Surgeon Day Groningen

Surgeon Day 2019

SurgeonDay Groningen is a scientific symposium, organized for and by medical students with a special interest in surgical specialties. November 15, 2019 the third edition will take place at the University Medical Centre Groningen (UMCG). Our organization consists of an eight-member student board, in collaboration with surgeons and PhD students.

Target audience

Our target group consists first and foremost of medical students from all over the Netherlands who aspire to surgery and want to orient themselves more widely. In addition, scientists, researchers and other interested parties will also be present. Finally, we of course have medical specialists involved in the master classes and workshops. The expected number of visitors will be around 250 students.

Focus

During the symposium, students will be given tools to develop themselves within the surgical profession and different specialists will give a unique perspective on their own surgical profession. The students who will attend this symposium are all very interested in the subject areas and by far most of them aspire to a career in surgery. In this way you can reach many potential surgeons in one day and you can already introduce them to your company. Our main speaker this year is Nobel Prize winner Ben Feringa. This year's theme is "Crossing Surgical Borders: Current Challenges and Future Perspectives", with a focus on surgery in the tropics, minimal invasive surgery, groundbreaking technological developments and training for surgeons.

Location

The UMCG is one of the largest university hospitals in the Netherlands and also the largest employer in the Northern Netherlands. Fundamental and clinical research at the UMCG belongs to the international scientific top. The presence of unique biobanks and research facilities attracts scientists from all over the world. The UMCG is located right in the center of Groningen and is very easy to reach by public transport.
